FALL 2016 GRADUATE COURSE

EDCI 624

GRADUATE SEMINAR IN INTERNATIONAL AND COMPARATIVE EDUCATION

Tuesday, 5:30-8:00
3 credit hours

The graduate seminar International and Comparative Education provides a theoretical and empirical basis for studying education in a rapidly changing global context and for understanding the existing interdependence of education, culture, ideology and policies on various levels. This course is designed for both education practitioners and researchers who seek to incorporate comparative and international perspectives into their pedagogies and research.

This course will be particularly interesting for students who address international, cross-national, cross-regional, or cross-cultural aspects of education or education policies in their research. Time will be allocated to discuss personal projects and research.

Topics that will be addressed in EDCI 624:
- History of International and Comparative Education
- Theories in International and Comparative Education
- Ideology and Education
- Culture and Education
- Education, Institutions, and Agencies
- National Systems of Education and Policies
- Globalization and Education
- Research in International and Comparative Education
